

On Tuesday, April 21, 9:30-11:00 AM, at DACOR Bacon House, 1801 F Street NW, Washington, DC, DACOR and UAA will host a “Transition to Teaching” conversation.

DACOR Bacon House Foundation and the USAID Alumni Association (UAA) are excited to host a “Transition to Teaching” conversation on Tuesday, April 21, from 9:30 a.m. to 11:00 a.m. Recently separated federal employees who are interested in learning about secondary-level teaching careers are encouraged to attend.

What opportunities are open to foreign affairs professionals who want to transition to teaching, particularly at the secondary level?

To explore that question, DACOR and UAA are delighted to welcome members and the public to this “Career Series: Transition to Teaching” event featuring recruitment officials from Fairfax County Public Schools (the largest public school system in Virginia) and admissions officers from graduate education programs at George Mason University, the University of the District of Columbia, and the University of Maryland (invited).

Join DACOR and the UAA for a conversation on “Transition to Teaching.” This event is the third in DACOR’s Career Series, which focuses on the future of foreign affairs careers and transition options for federal employees. DACOR is pleased to partner with the USAID Alumni Association for this event. Tom Brannan, a member of the DACOR Board and DACOR’s Program Committee, will moderate.

Tuesday, April 21 | 9:30–11:00 a.m.

DACOR Bacon House | 1801 F Street NW

Please note this is a hybrid event—you may attend in person or virtually. Virtual attendees will receive a link via email. To attend in person or virtually, please register here.

DACOR is a Washington-based, non-profit, non-partisan organization of foreign affairs professionals that promotes diplomacy and advocates for the Foreign Service. The USAID Alumni Association is a nonprofit organization that honors the service of those who have advanced human progress through USAID programs globally.